Walk Description

Leaving the Old Lighthouse, take the England Coast Path which is a tarmac shared access road that heads away from the nuclear power station. There are acorn signs on the road for you to follow. Heading through this unique landscape, you will see the scattered remains of fishing paraphernalia left abandoned on the shingle. The expanse of shingle is home to many varieties of rare flora and fauna. You will shortly pass the current lighthouse, with its distinctive black and white bands. Continue following the Coast Path passing Prospect Cottage, a distinctive house with yellow window frames, once home to the celebrated British film maker Derek Jarman who made a famous garden here on the shingle shore near Dungeness Power Station.

Passing the lifeboat station, the path will follow adjacent to Dungeness Road as you walk towards Lydd-on-Sea. You will also pass the Pilot Inn, described by Derek Jarman as serving “simply the finest fish and chips in all England”. The fine views out to sea are impressive whilst inland you will see the Dungeness National Nature Reserve.
home to bird species including bittern, little ringed plover and Slavonian grebe to name but a few.

At this point, you will be walking on a pavement. The atmospheric Romney Marsh landscape changes from shingle to sand as you reach Lydd-on-Sea, the wonderful sandy beach 5 stretching right ahead. The beach stretches into Greatstone 6, two miles of sandy beach is a welcome delight for any sunseeker, it would be easy to while away a good few hours here.

Picking up the Coast Path that runs adjacent to Coast Drive, continue following the beach-side path. As you head into Littlestone, the path will run adjacent to Grand Parade. At low tide, Littlestone beach 7 offers a wide expanse of sand, an inviting sight for any sunbather.

Your walk ends opposite the Victorian drinking fountain along the Grand Parade. From here it is just a short walk up Littlestone Road to the RHDR station 8 where you can catch the train from New Romney back to Dungeness.
